Information as you see it:

Information as APA wants it:

Authors(s):

_____________________________________  ____________________________________________________________
_____________________________________  ____________________________________________________________

Year:

__________

(is the information italicized? Yes _____ No _____)

Title of journal:

_____________________________________  __________________________________________________________

(is the information italicized? Yes _____ No _____)

Volume number of journal:

__________   ________

(is the information italicized? Yes _____ No _____)

Issue number of volume:

__________    (        )

(is the information italicized? Yes _____ No _____)

Pages numbers of article:

__________

__________ - ____________

DOI:  (only first few #s for this practice)

________________________  doi:__________________________

Now, write it as one entire citation:

(for this practice: fake the doi number; circle anything to be italicized)

_____________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________
Where’s the DOI?
(below are 3 examples of the DOI information)

- On the information page for the article (Landing page of article):

  DOI: 10.1371/journal.pone.0112405

  Digital Object Identifier: http://dx.doi.org/10.1016/j.jvoice.2012.12.009

  subscribe@asha.org; Web site: http://jslr.asha.org

  URL: http://dx.doi.org/10.1044/1092-4388(2012)11-0105

- On the first page of online article, usually at the top or bottom of the page.
  (below is an example)

  REVIEW ARTICLE

  published: 28 January 2014

  doi: 10.3389/fneur.2014.00007

What’s the name of the database?
If the article does not have a DOI, you will need to write the name of the database in its APA citation.